OISCA (Organization for Industrial, Spiritual and Cultural Advancement) is an international non-governmental organization founded in Japan in 1961. OISCA focuses on sustainable development by integrating industrial, spiritual, and cultural aspects. The organization operates in various countries, primarily in Asia, to support projects related to human resource development, environmental conservation, and the improvement of rural community welfare. This research aims to explain the efforts of the Organization for Industrial, Spiritual, and Cultural Advancement (OISCA) as a non-profit organization in enhancing human resources through its programs, which are designed to improve the welfare of farmers, teach environmental conservation, and promote global reforestation. This study uses a descriptive qualitative method, employing literature review, interviews, and observations as data collection techniques. The research objective is to describe OISCA's efforts in improving human resource quality, as well as its methods of reforestation and environmental conservation. The findings indicate the importance of non-profit or non-governmental organizations like OISCA, which aim to make the world greener and maintain ecological balance through their programs. OISCA is also committed to enhancing community capacity, particularly in agricultural knowledge and environmental conservation. OISCA's efforts have proven to be beneficial, as they have supported member countries worldwide in sustainable agricultural training and environmental preservation, gradually improving farmers' welfare and enhancing community capacity.
